1 Introduction

1.1 Procedures for Coding Open-ended Questions

Survey questionnaires often include open-ended questions that permit a respondent to provide an unstructured response of varying length and detail. Such responses may provide rich information that otherwise would not have been learned and insight into areas not anticipated by the survey developer.

In the 2012 OMAS survey, the type of open-ended question presented takes the form of an ‘Other (specify)’ option within a closed-ended question. In this instance, a respondent may choose to answer in his or her own words and the response is recorded verbatim by the interviewer. In post processing, these verbatim answers can then be coded according to existing codes and/or new codes can be applied to these answers.

This document describes the procedures followed by RTI International staff to collect accurate data, monitor data quality, code responses, and ensure the quality of coding.

1.2 Interviewer Training

Each ‘new to project’ interviewer is trained in-person in the proper techniques of collecting verbatim data; additionally, each interviewer is provided a manual that includes these techniques. More specifically, interviewers are instructed to carefully listen to what the respondent says and enter the response verbatim, exactly as it was given by the respondent. In cases where the question permits probing and the response is unclear, interviewers are trained to obtain a more complete or specific answer using appropriate neutral or non-directive probing techniques. Interviewers are also trained to follow conventions at all times to ensure that the responses entered accurately reflect the respondents’ answers and to guarantee that the data are collected in the same systematic manner.

1.3 Monitoring Quality of Data Collection

Open-ended questions are monitored for data quality on a routine basis. Quality Assurance Monitors observed interviewing and documentation techniques at the time of survey. Weaknesses in method were addressed with interviewers as quickly as appropriate, with specific details of what deficiency occurred and how situations should be addressed in the future. Any potential problems or suggestions were conveyed to the manager of the data collection center.

1.4 Manual Recoding of Open-ended Questions

The following describes the procedures followed by RTI International staff to code open-ended responses.

The manual coding of open-ended survey responses carries a variety of quality assurance steps to ensure the validity and reliability of data. Open-ended data recoding is a two person job at minimum. For the first round of recoding, two staff members recoded open-ended responses based on a previous codebook and developed new codes where appropriate. Their work was done in collaboration, not independent of each other. After the recoding had been completed, the project methodologist reviewed the new codes and suggested recoding to look for consistency and review any discrepancies
